The book:

Traditional medicine represents an important mean of providing health care to the population of less developed countries and is also being used more frequently in industrialized countries.

This book shows the difference between complementary and alternative medicine at an international level by comparing a developing country (South Africa) and an industrialized one (Switzerland). It presents different aspects concerning research and development, financing, commercialisation and efficiency.

If you are interested in the international development of traditional, alternative and complementary medicine, this book gives you a great overview of the chances within the last few years.
